THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1817.

New York, April 26.

Arrived at 2 o'clock the ship Pacific, Captain Bowne, in the short passage of 26 days from Liverpool. From our London and Liverpool Correspondents, we have received, by this arrival, files of London papers, of Lloyd's List, of the General Shipping and Commercial List, and the Liverpool Patent Trade List, all to the 25th of March inclusive; and to the politeness of Mr. Stansbie, a passenger in the Pacific, we are indebted for London and Liverpool papers—the latter to the 27th of March.

From our Lists and papers, we now publish as copiously as our time will permit. Our selections shall be continued in our next.

The Importer, Captain Ogden, sailed for this port in company with the Pacific, & her arrival may be daily expected. Among the passengers on board the Importer is the Noted WILLIAM COBBET.

Price of Stocks at London on the 25th of March.—3 per cent Consols 69 7-8 to 70; Consols for opening 70 1-8 to 69 7-8.

In the House of Lords on the 18th of March, Lord Holland introduced, with a long speech, the following motion.

"That an address be presented to the P. R. that he would be graciously pleased to order to be laid on their Lordships' table—1st. copies of all instructions to the Gov. or Governors of St. Helena, as to the personal treatment of Napoleon Bonaparte. 2d. Extracts of all such parts of the Correspondence as had passed between Napoleon Bonaparte and the Secretary of State, relative to the expenses of Bonaparte's establishment. 3d. Copies of such letters or applications of Bonaparte to the Governor or Governors of St. Helena, with the answer of the Gov. as had been received by the Secretary of State. 4th, Copies of all such dispatches as had been transmitted to the Secretary of State relative to the intercourse claimed by N. Bonaparte to be allowed between his place of residence and other parts of the island, with any remarks by Napoleon on that subject. 5th. Copies of any dispatches to the Secretary of state relative to applications by Napoleon Bonaparte to the Prince Regent. Some of those who had chosen to follow the fortunes of Bonaparte had children; and it had been stated that their parents had manifested an anxiety to have the means of religious instruction for these children, and there was no clergymen of their persuasion in the island; and, therefore, he moved, 6thly, for copies of all dispatches from the Governor of St. Helena to the Secretary of state, respecting any applications by the persons in question, on the subject of religious instruction for themselves or their children."

After a long debate the question was put, and negatived without a division.

LONDON, March 22.

Lord Exmouth has been in constant attendance at the Admiralty for these few days past, and it is in consequence rumoured that circumstances have occurred to render another visit to Algiers absolutely necessary. No official accounts have been received from any of our own cruizers or Consuls in the Mediterranean, to occasion any preparation of the description above alluded to; but we are sorry to learn, that the accounts received over land, by the way of Marseilles, afford but too much ground to fear that the Dey has recommenced his savage warfare against the subjects of the Christian States of Europe. The accounts which have reached London, may have been exaggerated it is true, by our good natured French allies, or innocently magnified by the zeal of the Society which exists at Paris to watch over the conduct of the villanous masters of the African shores of the Mediterranean. The late accession of strength, however, to the Algerine navy from Constantinople, may have put the Dey in better spirits, and has thus paved the way for his ultimate downfal, for we apprehend, that if he has provoked another bombardment, extirpation, & not submission, or surrender, will be the order of the day.

London Packet.

We have received Frankfort papers to the 15th, and Dutch Journals to the 20th inst. The scarcity of provisions has caused in Flanders tumults, similar to those in Ireland, originating in the same cause. The corn has been stopped in its paassage, and it has been found necessary to call in the military to preserve the public tranquility. The British troops have received the thanks of the civil authorities for their exertions.

The Dutch papers contain various accounts from different places, of inundations of the rivers, which still continue to rise; besides the damage already done, great apprehensions are entertained for the consequences to the harvest.

The following are extracts from these Papers;

Brussels, March 15.

They write from the French frontiers, that a quantity of corn, which was on the way from Calis through the Department of the north was stopped on the way and plundered by some people tumultnously collected together. Some detachments of English cavalry greatly contributed to restore order, have received thanks of the French Magistrates for their conduct on the occasion.

Gallipoli, Feb. 21.

Two American vessels have arrived here; their coming is considered as a favorable sign of the relations between the court of Naples and the U. States. It is probable that our trade will take the same direction as formerly to those countries, whither few of our merchants have hitherto ventured to send vessels for their own account.

Frankfort, March 14.

The Trieste observer states, that on the 14th October last, an Austrian brigantine, commanded by Captain Trajani, of Ragusa, with another Austrian vessel arrived at Grand Cairo, with a cargo of wood and iron and being the first Austrian ship that ever got so high up the Nile, was received with inconceivable joy.

A Flanders mail arrived last night with papers from Brussels to the 19th inst. The new duty imposed upon the shipping entering and leaving the Scheldt, continues a source of public anxiety in the Netherlands, as a measure against Antwerp, and in favor of Amsterdam. Rumours of its suspension have proved premature, and subsequent reports of its abolition appears equally unfounded.

Dublin, March 19.

One hundred barrels of American flour, of the cargo of the Henry Gay, from Baltimore, was sold by auction on Thursday, in Cork. This flour went off freely at from 93s. 6d. to 95s. per bbl. being at about 54s per cwt.

Nearly 20,000 barrels of flour shipped from America, and consigned to Liverpool, have been lost during the late tempestuous weather.

LONDON, March 25.

A Dutch Mail arrived this morning It has brought accounts from Otranto to the 28th of February, which state, that two vessels had recently sailed from that port to protect its trade against the pirates who infest the Mediterranean. The complaints against these marauders are more loud and general than ever.

We have received the Paris Papers of Friday and Saturday. The chamber of Peers continues occupied with the Budget. It is the only business of any interest to be disposed of in the present Session. The Moniteur contains the Law of Bills of Exchange, as passed by the two Chambers, and sanctioned by the Royal Assent. It enacts—

"That the holder of a bill of exchange down on the Continent or Islands of Europe, and payable in the European territories of France, whether payable at sight, or at one or more days or months, or usages at sight, must demand payment or acceptance within six months from its date, on forfeiture of all claim upon the endorsers, or even the drawer, if the latter has made provisions for it."

Paris, March 21.

We are assured that the new elections, the period of which does not appear to be yet fixed, will take place at four several times—that is to say 16 departments, which are to contribute to the renewal of 1817, will be classed in four divisions, to meet one after the other. It is thought that the department of the Seine and that the Oise will make part of the first division.

Paris, March 22.

The day on which the chamber of Deputies is to re-assemble, is not yet fixed. We are assured that this sitting, which probably will be the last of the session, will not take place until after the Budget be voted in the House of Peers; and that it will be merely occupied by a report on the remaining petitions presented during the sessions.

From the Savann Mseum.

Messrs. EDITORS—You will oblige a constant reader, by inserting the following brief narrative of the ever memorable event,

THE REFORMATION.

Tum vero omne mihi visum considere in ignes
Ilium, et ex imo verti Neptunia Troja
Ac veluti, summis antiquam in montibus ornum
Quum ferro adcisam crebrisque bipennibus instant
Ervere agricolæ certatim, illa asque minatur;
Et tremefactu comam concusso vertice nutat;
Vulneribus donec paublatim evicta supremum
Congemuit, traitque jugis ovulsa minam.

When the darkness of superstition had covered Christendom, the world supinely acquiesced in the enormous absurdities imposed upon it—until the year 1517, when this empire of darkness was gradually compelled to retreat before the open dawn of the glorious morn of the reformation.

The person who made the first attack on the extravagant superstitions which then prevailed, was MARTIN LUTHER. He was born at Eitleben, in Saxony, A. D. 1483. Possessed of splendid abilities, he had by the advice of his friends, devoted himself to the profession of the law. The great ruler of all events, however, had claimed him for the sanctuary, and by a providential interposition pointed out Luther's path of duty. Walking one day with a friend in the fields, his companion was killed by the discharge of a thunderstorm. This event affected him so deeply, that he withdrew into a convent, where meeting with a latin Bible, his curiosity was excited, and he henceforth devoted himself to the study of it.

As the amazing prodigality, luxury, and magnificence of Leo began about this time to exhaust the revenues of the Roman See; the never failing resource of indulgences was adopted as a most effectual method of levying a tribute which should liquidate these expenses. To carry this object into effect, men of popular talents, unblushing effrontery, and perfect devotedness to the papal power, were selected to preach, and disperse these rich indulgences. Among these persons John Tetzel exerted himself with wonderful ardor and success. He blazoned the virtues of the saints in colors of the most transcendent glory; vaunted the rich treasures of merit in the repository of the church, He said that he could supply all wants, remove all deficiencies and cancel all crimes.

Luther heard with indignation these pretensions; his natural temper was warm and irascible, his courage invincible, his eloquence powerful, his mind fraught with learning, and above all, he was deeply read in the oracles of God. No danger intimidated him, no difficulties awed him. In perseverance he was unshaken, in labours he was indefatigable. Thus gifted, he went forth boldly to fight the battles of his God. In 95 propositions, he challenged Tetzel to defend his conduct, and with the intrepidity of a veteran, boldly censured what he deemed heresy, & maintained that salvation was attainable exclusively through the merits of Christ.

Ecclesiastical censures were fulminated against Luther from all quarters, but he continued to make great advances without being intimidated; nor was he left without able coadjutors, who were raised up to his assistance; such as Zuinglius, Melancton, Carlostadius, Erasmus, and others, who will be had in everlasting remembrance; but for the detail of whose worthy deeds, a brief narrative will afford no room.

Luther had now prepared a translation of the Bible, which was speedily and universally circulated on the European continent, and throughout England. The shadows were flying fast, and the sun of righteousness began to rise and to illumine a world lying in papal darkness. The church of Rome tottered to its foundations, and though supported for a time by the strong arm of power, interest and wealth, yet abundant evidence was afforded throughout most of the nations of Christendom, that it was neither infallible nor invincible. The Germanic empire first extended its triumphs over the ruins of superstition. The reformed religion was propagated in Sweden soon after Luther's rupture with the church of Rome. In Denmark, the reformation was introduced as early as the year 1521. In France also, the reformers began to make some early progress. Even in Spain and Italy, the new religion was not without its victories. In Scotland the seeds of the reformation were early sown by noblemen who had resided in Germany during the religious disputes. And in England the principles of the reformers began to be adopted as soon as an account of Luther's doctrines could be conveyed thither. Henry the VIII. who had appeared as the zealous advocate and patron of the church of Rome, and who had obtained from the Pope the title of "defender of the faith," for writing against Luther, after a long solicitation for a divorce from his queen Catharine, weary by delay, cast away the papal yoke, to the great joy of the protestants.

To pursue this subject further, or to enter into it more minutely, would not be consistent with the medium through which this sketch meets the eye of the public. The design of this condensed view of the reformation, is to excite young persons to contemplate the subject more at large;—and for their sakes, a few moral considerations are superadded.

Let us admire the wisdom of God, who sometimes brings about the most stupenduous events, by means which appear to us to be the most insignificant. Who would have supposed that an inconsiderable monk could have been instrumental in subverting the papal tyranny. Let us also observe how often the wicked are made the instrument of their own punishment. Little did Leo suppose that the sale of indulgence, done for his support, should prove his overthrow. Let us be grateful for the civil and religious liberty which we enjoy; and which the world will increasingly enjoy. And while we rejoice that we are protestants, let us not be uncharitable nor censorious, even to those who remain members of the papal church; although that religion is erroneous & opposed to the honor of Jesus Christ, yet there have been many excellent men who have belonged to that church in all ages, the friends of mankind and the ornaments of the country, and the age in which they lived. But still the voice of God to all who are sensible of the errors of that church, is, "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

Savannah, April 22

We have accounts from the Southward to the 15th instant, which state that the frontier has been for some time past in a constant state of alarm, from the hostile appearance of the Indians, (supposed to be the lower Creeks, or Flint river Indians) who, it is believed, have established a town on the Okafonoka, near the head of St. Mary's river; and, are in the habit of visiting our frontier settlements, and often driving off large droves of cattle, and sometimes horses. The hostilities evinced by the Indians, is attributed to the notorious Woodbine, who it seems has again made his appearance amongst the deluded savages. A gentleman of respectability, near St. John's East Florida, writes to his friend in St. Mary's, as follows:—"I hope something will be done effectually with the Indians, who are instigated by Woodbine, now resident at the mouth of Sewanee, where there is a fort and block house." It is generally believed that Woodbine has been endeavouring for a considerable time past, to inveigle——to depart with him for the Island of Cuba, where he tells them they will be free. We hope government will pay some attention to the exposed situation of our frontier brethren; and send a force for their protection.

Extract of a letter from an officer in the U. S. army to the editors, dated, Fort Hawkins, April 5th, 1817.

"I shall leave this in a few days, for the lower Creeks, with a force to remove the settlers off of the Indian lands, east of the Chatahoochie river. It is a difficult and disagreeable duty, as we may fall in with some of the hostile chiefs. In that case we must do the best we can."

ALEXANDRIA:
THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1817.

We recommend with more than common earnestness, to the attention of all our readers, the paper headed "HYDROPHOBIA," in this day's Gazette. It deeply concerns every individual, and particularly parents and heads of families. The boundless licentiousness, and uncontrolable self-will in which the children of our country are, with so few exceptions, indulged by the mistaken notions of their parents, renders caution about dogs more necessary in this country than in any other—while the chances of danger are multiplied and every day multiplying in it beyond all other countries in a proportion which surpasses the power of calculation, and almost outrages credibility. The obstinate, surly disobedience of the thoughtless crop of boys which so often render them regardless of parental authority, the abundant means which they generally possess of feeding a dog while it is small and young, the fondness for the company of that species so natural to man, and which makes the father too often as inconsiderate as the child, have conspired to multiply the animal in all our towns and cities to an extent which, exclusive of that most terrific of dangers so unfortunately attached to the race, is a constant nuisance and a pest to the inhabitants. In those parts of Philadelphia which are in all other respects the most pleasant and healthy—we mean the parts most remote from the public markets and the haunts of business, the inhabitants are kept awake every fair night, and particularly on moonlight nights, by the incessant barking and uninterrupted howl of the flocks of dogs which infest the streets. Every litter of pups that comes into the world adds, often the whole, generally the greatest part of its contents, to the cry—every "apple-eating urchin" gets him a little pet from the brood, and probably in the course of a year is able to accommodate each of his younger playmates with a pet too—and thus the evil encreases and will continue to encrease until it bursts in one extensive, horrible calamity upon the citizens, and brings them to a sense of the mischief they have so long supinely seen preparing for them. The human imagination cannot keep pace with the horrors which twenty thousand dogs (for there are at least so many in Philadelphia) infected with the hydrophobia, and infecting every animal that comes in their way, would spread through such a populous city.

The same may, to a certain degree, be said of every city, town or village, we have seen in the Union. The magistrates of Charleston, South Carolina, aware of the danger, have for some years past enacted laws and made provisions to secure the people by preventing dogs from traversing the streets either by night or day. Taxation would go a great way to diminish the chances of danger, and would if smartly applied be a two-fold benefit to the community. The magistracy of Charleston has gone much farther—and we have no hesitation in saying that in every part of the Union their example ought to be imitated. Certainly some effectual means ought to be adopted to prevent the multiplication, beyond a certain extent, of that species.—No one living admires or indeed loves the amiable animal more than we do:—But we love our fellow creatures still more, and think it will not admit of a doubt that ten thousand blind puppies should be drowned rather than that one human being should die of that most horrible of all imaginable deaths, the Hydrophobia.

MESSRS. GALES & SEATON:

As considerable alarm has lately been excited here, and in some other parts of Virginia, by dogs running mad, I have to request that you will insert in your valuable paper the following interesting observations on hydrophobia, or canine madness, extracted from a late review of two modern essays on that disease; the one by Dr. Moseley, of London, the other by Dr. Bouriat, of Montpelier, in France.

The Reviewer, after stating the celebrity of these physicians, and particularly of the British physician, who has seen more cases of this disease than any other known practitioner, observes, "that both these authors have written at the same time, without any probable means of communication, and have not differed in the principal points, or views of their subj-

S. GALES & SEATON:

considerable alarm has lately been d here, and in some other parts of ia, by dogs running mad, I have t st that you will insert in your va per the following interesting obser
s on hydrophobia, or canine mad extracted from a late review of tw rn essays on that disease; the o
r. Moseley, of London, the other b Bouriat, of Montpelier, in France.
e Reviewer, after stating the cel of these physicians, and particula the British physician, who has see cases of this disease than any othe n practitioner, observes, "that bo authors have written at the sam without any probable means of con cation, and have not differed in th ipal points, or views of their subje hey were also induced by the same motive, that is, by the prevalence of canine madness in their respective countries.

"Bouriat informs us of his deep affliction on witnessing its ravages among men, women and children, and in the very heart of his country, caused by a she wolf. At the same time, Mosely wrote, that in England the disease was raging like an epidemic. How soon similar occurrences may take place in this country, is unknown; and, therefore, that it is very desirable to be advised and guided by superior experience, none will call in question."

Nature of Canine Madness.

"Bouriat says, the poison which constitutes it has affinity only with the slaver of carnivorious animals; for men may eat their flesh, or be sprinked with their blood without danger. Moseley observes, that the authors have differed greatly with respect to the duration of the poison in the system—but he has, from the unerring authority of twenty eight well authenticated cases, and therefore sufficiently numerous, proved, that the existence of the poison has been uncertain, from the period of nine to that of about two hundred and fifty days. He very particularly recommends great diffidence, and never to meddle with strange dogs, which may be larkingly diseased; he represents also a mad cat as most dangerous, because the feline kind, as the tiger, etc. start at every thing, and may inflict a wound and insert the poison by the claws, owing to the habit of these animals licking their paws; and as for surgical treatment of the wounded part, it should comprise not only those that are bitten, but those that are slightly scratched."

Symptoms.

Dr. Moseley has described two species of madness in dogs; the raging, and the moping madness.

"Under the first, dogs become lank and thin; their eyes are of a red fiery hue; the tongue is discolored; they froth or foam, and slaver; unexpectedly they start, run against any thing in their way, and will bite indiscrimately. They know no home nor master, and thus are frequently wandering about. They howl and bark hoarsely, bite the ground, gnaw their flesh and die in convulsions.

"In moping madness, dogs are seen moping under chairs and tables, as if sleepy and stupid. They have dull eyes, sad countenances, hanging head and tail, ears flaby, curved back; they shake and tremble, rarely bark, and die trembling and tossing."

Mode of Treatment.

"These physicians agree as to the speedy mode to be adopted in the treatment of a wound inflicted by a rapid animal—it is its immediate destruction by caustic or by fire, in order to annihilate the poison. The wound requires repeated application of escharotics, (such as corrosive sublimate, or red precipitate) to keep it discharging, and a judical surgical management according to its nature and situation. Until an experienced person can be had to employ the powerful agency of pure pot ash, (caustic,) it is proper to burn linen, cotton or tow, and even gun-powder on the wound. No internal remedies are to be relied on without local applications; and Moseley says, destroying the part, and continuing the suppuration some weeks, are sufficient to prevent all mischief.

"These authors unite in the most unqualified rejection of all remedies from empirics, quacks, or even well meaning persons, who, being unacquainted with medical science, are not aware of their responsibility, when they would waste precious time, and jeorpardize many lives by their nostrums, in preference to the certain and judicious means which are actually put into our hands.

"As the work of Dr. Bouriat is not yet translated into the English language, we recommend that of Dr M. which as a vade-mecum should have a place in every practitioner's book case. He says, himself, "until the late great prevalence of canine madness in London, there were only a few physicians who ever saw it—and that, after it, there was scarcely one who had an opportunity of seeing it often.' What warning for us to be prepared against so distressing an evil! In no other treatise of the kind can be found more authenticated success in the mode of treatment, more experience, more of that useful instruction, which, after many ages, has been scattered among numerous books, than is now condensed in this excellent performance of Dr. Moseley."

"Before closing this article, we beg leave to repeat the simple but effectual treatment recommended by these experienced physicians:

"Destroy, as soon as possible the bitten part by caustic or fire; keep the wound suppurating or discharging for a few weeks, and the patient is safe."

New-York, April 28.

The U. S. ship Ontario, captain Downs, has received orders to prepare for sea with all possible despatch. We understand she is to carry out despatches.

On Sunday, the U. S. brig Boxer, capt. Porter, sailed for the Gulf of Mexico.—Septimus Tyler, Esq. went out in her as agent to the President of Hayti, to demand satisfaction for a captured vessel, and the execution of an American.

A letter from the house of Thomas & John Thornly, dated Liverpool, March 27, states, that "Since the above date 24th] our whole import of cotton has consisted of about 1800 bales; the demand very good, and prices of lower and middling descriptions, have advanced a farthing to a half penny. The sale of New-York potashes has been made at 48s. in bond, for the French market. Flax-seed has been sold at 95 to 100s. a cask."

Extract of a letter from New-Orleans, dated March 29.

"Our banks resume specie payments to-morrow, 1st April.

"Cotton, 27 1-2 to 28 1-2—some very prime has been at 29; tobacco 9 to 8 1-2, cash quick, but will probably fall—sugar, 12 to 12 1-2—molasses. none—flour 13—hempen yarns 9 dull—pig lead 7 to 8—corn 1 25 per bushel—cognac brandy 8, scarce—claret wine $67 to 70 per cask—whiskey, 80 to 85" Balt. Pat.

The following extract of a letter from a respectable house in Liverpool, dated 8th of March, 1817, to their correspondents in this city, contains a more correct and dispassionate view of the real estate of affairs in England, than any thing we have seen. It will be read with interest. N. York Evening Post.

We have nothing new to communicate on the subject of our market, but conceive you will be anxious to hear what opinions are generally entertained by individuals on the alledged disaffection of many of the lower classes, and the consequent suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act—Such a measure is calculated to impress those who hear it, at a distance, with erroneous views of our situation, and to excite apprehensions respecting the tranquility of the Kingdom, entirely unfounded in fact Till the report of the secret committee appeared, the existence of any extensive organized association was never even matter of suspicion, and much as we are disposed to depreciate those attempts which are said to have been made to subvert civil government and the principles of morality, we trust they have proceeded from comparatively few individuals, and that the progress will be speedily checked.—The present distresses of the country are unquestionably great, and the sufferings arising from our new state of things have been borne with inimitable fortitude, but turbulent individuals appear to have availed themselves of the misery of the lower classes to attempt to render them dissatisfied with their country.—You will readily imagine that it is an enquiry of deep interest at the present moment, whether the causes of our sufferings are of temporary or permanent nature, and much variety of opinion prevails on the subject. We appear at this present moment, notwithstanding the profusion with which our national resources have been lavished, to possess more of every thing which constitutes national wealth, than at the commencement of the last war. A soil infinitely more fertile, and an immense accession of ships, Ware houses, buildings farming stock, machinery, manufactures, labour & capital, & yet a suffering population and extended distress, would not this rather lead us to conclude that much of our present suffering may be traced to our peculiar situation on the return of peace, to an excessive population induced by the various employments afforded by the war, and by the encouragement it presented to the extension of our trade by securing a monopoly of the commerce of the world. Had our present population been graduly produced by the gradual extension of our legitimate trade, all classes would now have been employed, but, unhappily, thousands are thrown out of occupation, and the rate of wages is reduced by our large excess of labourers, to a sum inadequate to the purchase of the necessaries of life. This state of things of course, cannot be permanent; by death or emigration, the labouring population will be reduced, and will ultimately, be regulated by the employment from which its subsistence is to be derived: but the accidental circumstance of the present excess of labourers, will no doubt have the effect of compelling them to a more scanty mode of living, and of introducing a corresponding and a permanent reduction in the average price of wages throughout the country. This reduction will operate favorably in our commerce and manufactures; by enabling us to compete more successfully with other nations, where the necessaies of life are more easily obtained: but the money rate of wages will still be supported, at a level relatively high, by the relative weight of our taxation. It is in this way that we must long suffer from the extent of our national debt, since although it in no degree effects our internal situation, being drawn from one part of the community to another, it has a most injurious influence on our internal economy, by deranging the natural distribution of National wealth The confidence which is generally felt in our tranquility and resources, is unequivocally demonstrated by the rapid rise in the funds, and as the spring advances many branches of our commerce will naturally revive.

Important—For the Banks.

We learn by a gentleman from Philadelphia, who left there on Saturday, that Mr Sergeant has completely accomplished his SPECIE and other engagements on very favorable terms—and if the Electra, a vessel bound to Philadelphia in a very short passage from London, had stayed a few days longer, she would have brought some of the money. The Paradise of Coquettes,

A POEM, in nine Parts.

A second edition of this elegant Poem is just published and for sale by the Subscribers.

The character of this Poem is thus given by the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviewers:—

The Paradise of Coquettes;

The character in which the poet professes to speak, is that of the POET OF WOMAN. He is supposed to be addressing woman, and woman only, and addressing her, 'on adventures of which she is the heroine, and on charms and graces, which it is the whole history of her beauty to have exercised with failure or success.'

His incontestible merits, and the assiduous care which he has bestowed upon the poem, deserve the warmest praise.

Quarterly Review, Oct. 1814.

We have here a little volume which may be fairly regarded as a prodigy in this age of quarto ballads, romances, heroics, and sentimental simplicity. It is by far the best and most brilliant imitation of Pope, that has appeared since the time of that great writer; with all his point, polish, and nicely-balanced versification, as well as his sarcasm and witty malice. He is always at home—always lively and entertaining.

His satire is polished and yet pungent.

His versification, in particular, is almost invariably flowing & harmonious.

Edinburgh Review, Feb. 1815.

"A vein of polite irony runs through the 'Paradise of Coquettes' which was familiar to the writers of the age of Anne and George the First, but has been discarded in making other modern improvements, by our cotemporaries."

James Kennedy & Son.
